Bachelor of Business (Management)

What is CSU's Bachelor of Business (Management)?
Management is about getting things done, and CSU's Bachelor of Business (Management) is designed to provide students with the knowledge and skills to do just that.

Whether you aspire to a career in the private, government or not-for-profit sectors, CSU's Bachelor of Business (Management) will help you succeed at every level of management from supervisor, line manager or department head to CEO.

Indigenous student program
CSU's Bachelor of Business (Management) offers Indigenous students a specially developed four-year program that combines innovative online education with intensive on campus residential schools.

The program is ideal for those who need flexible independent learning (study any time, anywhere), but also want face-to-face instruction at certain critical times (e.g. before assignment deadlines or exams). For qualifying students, the cost of travel (including accommodation and meals) to attend residential schools is covered by the Away From Base (AFB) scheme.

A key benefit for Indigenous students who follow this program structure is that, on successful completion, they will graduate with two business specialisations; Management plus a Joint Study in Human Resource Management.

The program is fully supported and Indigenous students will be provided with individualised guidance throughout their studies by a dedicated academic mentor.

What will you study?
The Bachelor of Business (Management) comprises 24 subjects, and the program plan for Indigenous students is based on enrolment of two subjects per session (six subjects per year over four years). You will study a range of business subjects aimed at providing both people management skills and practical skills in areas such as accounting, business analysis, economics, law, marketing, project and operations management, change management and business strategy.

How will you study?
The Indigenous student program is offered in mixed mode, which combines online education with face-to-face residential block teaching at specified times each session.

Online education is supported by web-based learning and research tools, and you can access lecturers, libraries and student support from anywhere at a time that suits you.

Some reasons for studying Management at CSU:
- CSU offers a range of support services for Indigenous students
- students may be eligible for financial assistance through the Away From Base scheme
- scholarships for Indigenous students are available to support your studies
- you will be guided throughout your studies by a dedicated academic mentor
- CSU graduates get jobs. We consistently rank highly for graduate employment
- online education allows you to study from anywhere at a time that suits you.
